
It is with great sadness that the editors of Trade, Law and Development note the passing of one of our editors, Mr Vikrant Nagaich. In the short span of time that he was with us, Vikrant impressed everyone with his brilliant ability to multitask. He was an integral part of many college activities, ranging from basketball, theatre, mooting and partaking in journal responsibilities, while also remaining an outstanding student. Perhaps his best quality was his ability to empathise with the less fortunate. Vikrant was a strong advocate for the rights of the poor, and often dedicated his holidays to the betterment of society. One could find him in the hinterlands of Jharkhand teaching village children basic English, or in jail with Medha Patkar and her supporters for opposing repressive policies. Needless to say, he was a rare gem of a human being.

Vikrant is remembered by his parents, friends and teachers. The editors of TL&D are acutely aware of the loss of the spark that he brought to the Board.
